Atchison's Corn Festival.

In preparing the luncheon for visiting railroad men and the officers from Fort Leavenworth, this question came up: In frying four dozen chickens, shall the backs, necks, gizzards and livers be used? What would you have done? We let them go in; they're plenty good enough for editors, anyway, and we believe for anybody. By the way, how many "pieces" in four dozen fried chickens? We've been investigating, and know. To each chicken there are twelve pieces. Ten good pieces and the neck and gizzard, making twelve in all—two drumsticks, two wings, two breasts, two thighs, two back pieces, and the neck and gizzard. Five hundred and thirty-eight pieces of chicken in four dozen. The chickens were young, and the livers didn't amount to much.—Atchison Globe.
